Financial outlook: FY 2006

Revenue: Well-positioned for long-term growth, but cautious outlook for the remainder of 2006

- ❑ Desktop
 - Expect a positive increase in revenue beginning in 4Q06 due to increased monetization of search traffic generated via our users
- ❑ Devices
 - Continued positive developments, as more and more consumer electronics companies put browsers on their devices
- ❑ Mobile
 - Cautious outlook in the short-term because of uncertainty regarding Nokia volumes. Expect Motorola volumes to ramp up, with timing unclear

Operating Expenses (excluding stock option costs): Expected to grow at a comparable rate to 2005 vs. 2004

- ❑ Continued investment in our business lines, in particular around Opera Mini
- ❑ Continued investment in sales & marketing, new foreign offices (Japan and USA, in particular), and engineering and customer delivery

Reviews of Opera 9

"Several new features that will be compelling to many. Good stability and performance. Widgetize! service likely to start giving Firefox's extensions a run for their money. Lovely design."

PC Magazine, July 25, 2006

"..., once the final release version of Opera 9 comes out, I'd trade my boxed set of La Boheme (starring Luciano Pavarotti, no less) for it if I had to. Fortunately, I won't have to, since Opera remains free. Oh, and the installation file is still under 4MB."

Opera Widgets, a major focus for Opera 9 launch

- Widgets are fun Web programs you can run right on your desktop. Access news and weather, play games, follow your favorite sports teams and much more.
- Widgets are built entirely using open web technologies, but using the widget generator (Widgetize) you can build your personal photo gallery and news widgets with only minimal knowledge about web technologies.
- Widgets are not only an important browser feature. Opera aims to create an eco-system of developers creating solutions across different media. For example, Widgets will be supported in Opera 9 for Nintendo Wii and Symbian Series 60.

Opera automatically displays the widget icon on a site with a widget

TouchtheSky, a weather widget, is currently most popular with 285,000 downloads

Widgets like the True HTML editor provide web developers with new tools yet not available for other browser.
